

The Full Service Agency...

December - 2018

Christmas and New Years is an exciting time with school and work holidays and a time to recharge after a long year. Maintaining a safe work/life balance can be especially hard considering strict timeframes to meet project completions, impending end of year shut downs and Christmas celebrations. Adding temporary employees often helps fill the void so remember to induct them through your safety policies and reassure all of your people that their safety is important.

“WorkCover often sees a spike in injury claims at this time of the year for simple but preventable accidents, like falling from ladders, slips, trips and falls. So, it’s important for employers to plan activity in advance and reassure workers that protecting their safety is top priority.” (Workcover Queensland).

Mental health of staff is especially important to those who may find the Christmas New Years’ time difficult personally. Checking in on your people and involving them in pre-planning where possible is a way to reduce both your own and staff work stress.
